The Sebastian Chamber Players is a newly-formed Baroque orchestra based in Connecticut performing the music of the 17th and 18th centuries on period instruments with historically-informed styles. The string players are former and current members of the Yale Baroque Ensemble, the core of the one-year post-graduate fellowship program in early music at the Yale School of Music. The woodwind players are drawn from the Juilliard School's new Historical Performance program. As the group takes its name from J. S. Bach's middle name, the inaugural set of two concerts in May 2010 was thematically programmed with musical works by Bach and his contemporaries.
